Mid-Week Rainfall, Cooling Expected - By Drew Lerner

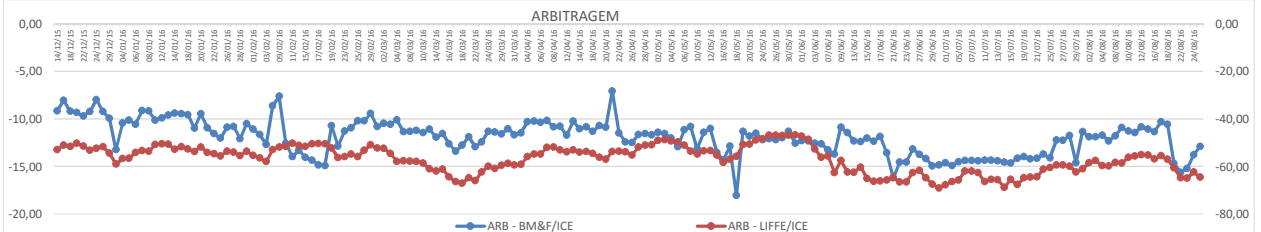

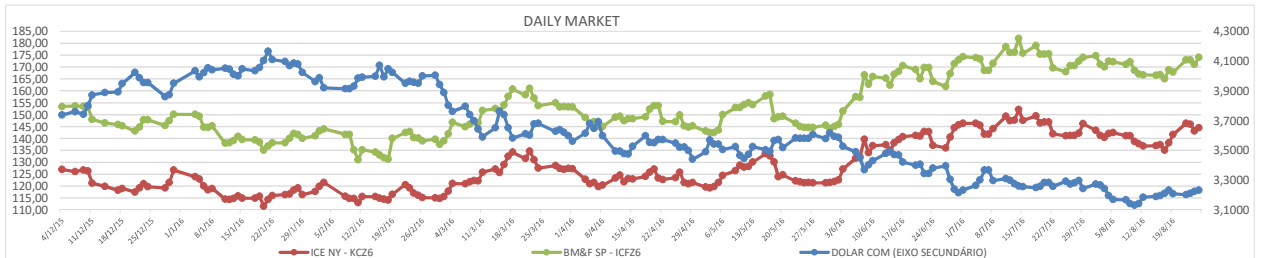

Kansas City, August 26 (World Weather, Inc.) – Dry and warm weather will dominate Brazil coffee areas today through Monday. Rain and cooler conditions will evolve during the middle to latter part of next week with enough rain in northern Parana and southwestern Sao Paulo to induce some flowering. No crop threatening cold is expected, but the rainfall will need to be watched for premature flowering in some areas. No flowering is expected in Sul de Minas.

BRAZIL

No rain fell in Brazil coffee production areas Thursday. Afternoon high temperatures were mostly in the 20s and lower 30s Celsius with most temperatures over 30 occurring from northern Sao Paulo to central Bahia. No area was warmer than 33. Mostly dry weather will occur in coffee production areas of Brazil through Monday. The only exception will be in coastal Bahia where some periodic showers and thunderstorms may produce some light to moderate rainfall. Only light amounts of rain will drift inland into interior eastern Bahia and no coffee flowering is expected in the interior production areas. The first opportunity for more significant rain to fall in Parana, Sao Paulo, southern Sul de Minas and Rio de Janeiro will occur during mid-week next week when rain totals late Tuesday through Thursday range from 6 to 25 millimeters while amounts further north into Zona de Mata and central Minas Gerais vary up to 10 millimeters. There is some potential for northern Parana and southwestern Sao Paulo to receive upwards to 50 millimeters of rain. That much moisture on top of that which fell during this past weekend will induce additional coffee flowering, although most of that will be in minor production areas. Flowering in Sul de Minas is not very likely, although it will not take much more rain to induce such conditions.

Precipitation Friday and Saturday of next week, Sep. 2-3 will likely be erratic and light occurring in Sul de Minas, Zona de Mata and Rio de Janeiro. Rainfall each day, however, will be less than 6 millimeters. Additional rain may impact a part of Parana and Sao Paulo September 4-6 while most other areas will be dry.

Temperatures will gradually trend warmer through the weekend with highs getting to the middle and upper 20s through the lower and middle 30s. The warmest readings will be Sunday and Monday. Low temperatures through Monday morning will be no cooler than 9 with many areas of 10 to 20. Some cooling will accompany the mid-week rainfall from Parana to Zona de Mata and central Minas Gerais with highs Wednesday into Friday varying in the upper teens through the 20s. In contrast, very warm to hot weather will continue in Bahia and northern Minas Gerais where daily highs of upper 20s to the middle 30s are expected followed by lows in the middle and upper teens to lower 20s. Temperatures may not change much into the following weekend.
