'End moisture stress'

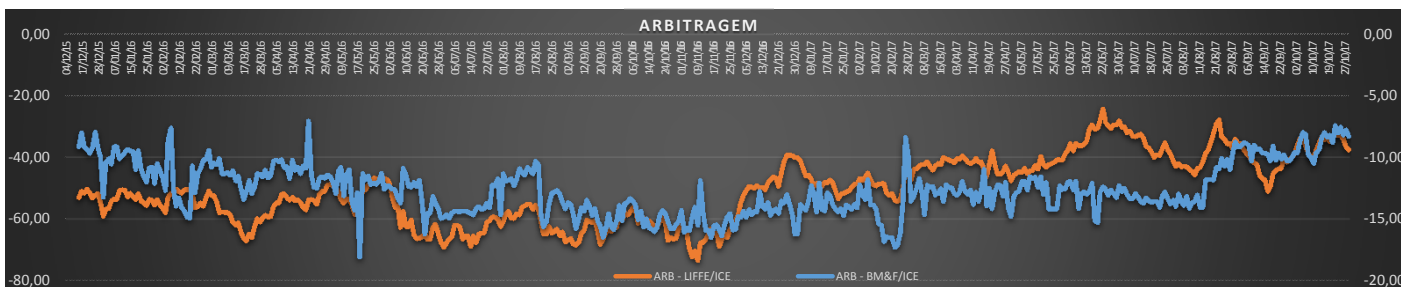

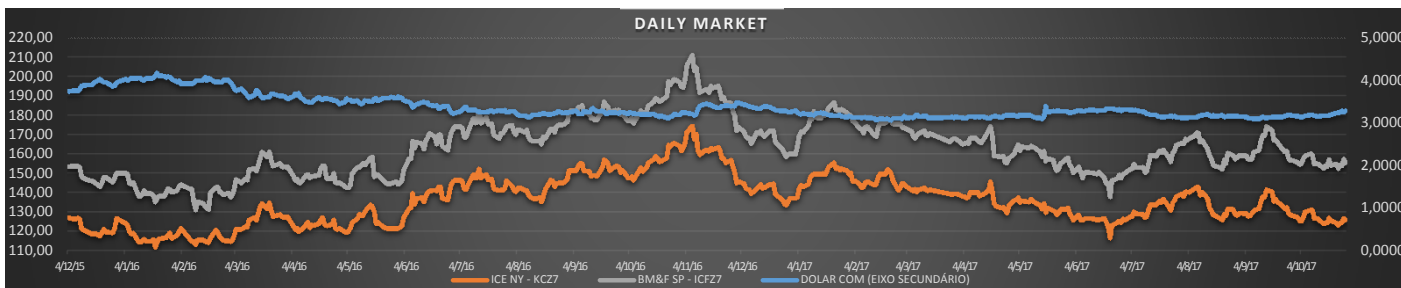

The gains defied some upbeat ideas on Brazilian weather, with Commodity Weather Group saying that "rains should end moisture stress for nearly all Brazilian soybeans", and corn, coffee and sugar cane crops too, "in the next 10 days with minimal flooding risk".

Tobin Gorey at Commonwealth Bank of Australia said that "weather forecasters expect Brazil's Mato Grosso to receive some useful rain this week.

"Farmers have delayed planting in the region because of dry soils but that should improve this week. "The market still has a small premium to lose if this worry is alleviated."
