Coffee Market Report

There are mixed reports coming out of Brazil in terms of the volumes of rains for the last few days over the main coffee districts in South East Brazil, with some reports indicating that they were erratic and below average for the present. Thus, while they indicate that more rain is needed to assist to set the forthcoming new 2018 crop, the forecasts seemingly indicate that there shall be further rains due over the coming two veeks and for the present, there are no frightening weather reports coming to the fore from Brazil. This very evident, from the sideways direction that has prevailed over the past few days, within the speculatively net short-sold New York market.

Meanwhile with a mid-week holiday interruption within Brazil and with reference prices of the New York market remaining soft, the internal coffee market in Brazil for the arabica coffees has been quiet this week and with the Brazil real having recovered to 3.27 to the dollar, it is likely to dampen interest in farm selling activity during trade today.

There is another long weekend for some in Brazil due, with the Zumbi dos Palmares or Black Consciousness Day holiday on Monday, but with this an optional holiday, the indication is that many businesses shall remain open and it shall be a near normal trading day on Monday. Further making it unlikely that there shall be any inspiration for pre-long weekend selling and for any noticeable increase in Brazil exporter price fixation hedge selling, due for the New York market today.
