Robusta cools

Among soft commodities, robusta coffee futures for January extended their decline, dropping 1.7% to $1,878 a tonne, the contract's weakest close in 15 months. The sharp decline has puzzled many investors, coming against a backdrop of worries over rains dogging the harvest in Vietnam, the world's top robusta bean grower. And International Coffee Organization data on Tuesday showed world robusta coffee exports down 9.2% year on year in September, at 5.48m bags. The price drop has been attributed by many to ructions ahead of first notice day for the November contract, on Wednesday, when live contracts gain physical delivery obligations.

Net short support

Arabica futures escaped most of the selling, ending down 0.6% at 125.10 cents a pound for December, with funds having already built a large net short in robusta coffee. World arabica exports for September dropped to 5.48m bags, down 9.2% year on year, the ICO said. By: Mike Verdin Source: agrimoney.com
